A three-hour tour: Selected Bushwick galleries

3:43 pm by Sharon Butler

As some readers may remember, I went to the University of Connecticut for my MFA degree, and until last year, I taught an MFA seminar up in Storrs. These days my schedule doesn't allow taking those beautiful foliage tours up to Storrs each week, so I invited the first- and second-year students for an afternoon tour of galleries in Bushwick. Fully funded, just like back in the day when I went there, UConn offers generous studio space in a bucolic setting, which gives the students time to think and make work without distraction. Every now and then, though, they like to emerge from their capacious studios to see what's on view at the NYC galleries. We met at 56 Bogart, wound around the neighborhood, and ended at Sardine. Here's a selection of the work we saw, with links in case readers can't visit IRL.
