Art Tour NY | Bushwick Galleries, Summer 2016

Even New York slows down during the Summer, with fewer and fewer art openings going on in the city. Even so, it is a good time to catch up with the Bushwick art scene, that has seen an increasing number of interesting projects being showcased in the area.

The group show Field Studies at TSA – Tiger Strikes Asteroid (through August 7) addresses exactly what its title suggests: experiments on the field, where science meets exploration and travel. These investigations often include impersonation, a journey inside subjectivity. Field Studies is curated by Andrew Prayzner and Naomi Reis, and presenting the work of Terry Adkins, Emilie Clark, Zachary Fabri, Rachel Frank, Matthew Jensen, Julia Oldham, and Lina Puerta.

Another group show, Rules of the Game at Transmitter (through August 7) sets its focus on the contrast between sport and art, where the first is essentially a set of rules in itself, while the latter is based on the crossing of boundaries and demystification of rules. The show features work by Palma Blank, Amanda Browder, Paul Corio, Jean Alexander Frater, Ben McNutt, Michael Namkung, Norm Paris, and Derrick Velasquez.

A fresh curiosity, Or Bust, a group exhibition at Honey Ramka (through August 14) gathers together a good number of contemporary sculpture in the relatively small gallery space. The artwork in the selection bears a clear reference to antiquity collections. The great variety of effigies reminds of ancient sculptures on museum displays, ranging from crafts to monumental.
